

South Lanarkshire Council

Local Government Manifesto 2022

The Power of Local

Contents

Overview	3
Prioritising the economy	5
Building community wealth	6
Supporting local businesses to go net zero	8
Transforming local places	9
Helping businesses to start-up and scale-up	10
Smart regulation	11

Overview

For South Lanarkshire Council and small businesses alike, the Covid-19 crisis has made daily operations – from delivering services to serving customers – far more difficult.

Since the last council election, there has been a 0.9% increase in the number of registered businesses in the area – compared to a 1.3% increase for Scotland overall

But the last two years have also underlined just how important the council and local businesses are to each other. Businesses stepped up and found ways to deliver essentials in their communities, while the council delivered a variety of Covid grants aimed at local businesses hit hardest.

The unparalleled local insight, spending and decision-making powers that the local authority and small businesses possess make them a powerful driver of local change.

This election therefore marks a unique opportunity to deepen and strengthen the relationship between the council and local small business so that we can deliver for our economies and communities.

To this end, the South Lanarkshire Council should follow these 6 steps to local recovery:

- Set ambitious targets to increase procurement spend with smaller local firms by 2% annually for the next five years to 27% in 2025/26.
- Boost the economic recovery of local places by rejecting applications for out-of-town retail developments for the next five years.
- Support local businesses to continue their journey to net zero by providing grant support to the small businesses who will be hit hardest by the transition.
- Help local footfall and increase economic activity by fully reopening their main offices in Hamilton and elsewhere, thus enabling the return of more of their office-based staff.
- Help businesses to start-up and scale up by investing in, and supporting, Business Gateway services – and offering targeted support for areas where there is significant untapped potential, such as women-led and migrant-led businesses.
- Improve the relationship between the council and business by creating joined up online systems in areas such as licensing and non-domestic rates.

Prioritising the economy

South Lanarkshire Council is a key player in the local economy. It maintains and builds new infrastructure; invests in our towns and villages; educates our children; keeps our streets clean; enjoys significant spending power; and regulates and supports businesses.

When the council uses these powers to support local businesses – such as when it provided Covid grant support to local businesses during the pandemic – a range of social and economic benefits materialise. However, the council can also make decisions that hamper local business growth.

Since April 2020, Councils have distributed at least £2.4bn in grant support to businesses

Over the next five years, the council could face difficulties to maintain the current level of business support services due to financial pressures. Growing demand in services such as social work and education, coupled with budget pressures, make it more likely that they will react by cutting services like economic development and roads, while hiking charges for planning and licensing.

With South Lanarkshire's small businesses looking to repay £257m of government backed Covid debt, spiralling overheads and cashflow tightening, small businesses need the council to use every tool at their disposal to support local businesses.

So, on the key decisions – from setting the rates for car parking charges through to the maintenance of local roads – small businesses will expect the council to think hard about the economy.

For example, the council could provide a welcome boost to footfall and turnover by fully reopening their offices in Hamilton and elsewhere. Council workers used to provide an almost daily cash injection across many local economies – economic activity that has been lost over the last two years.

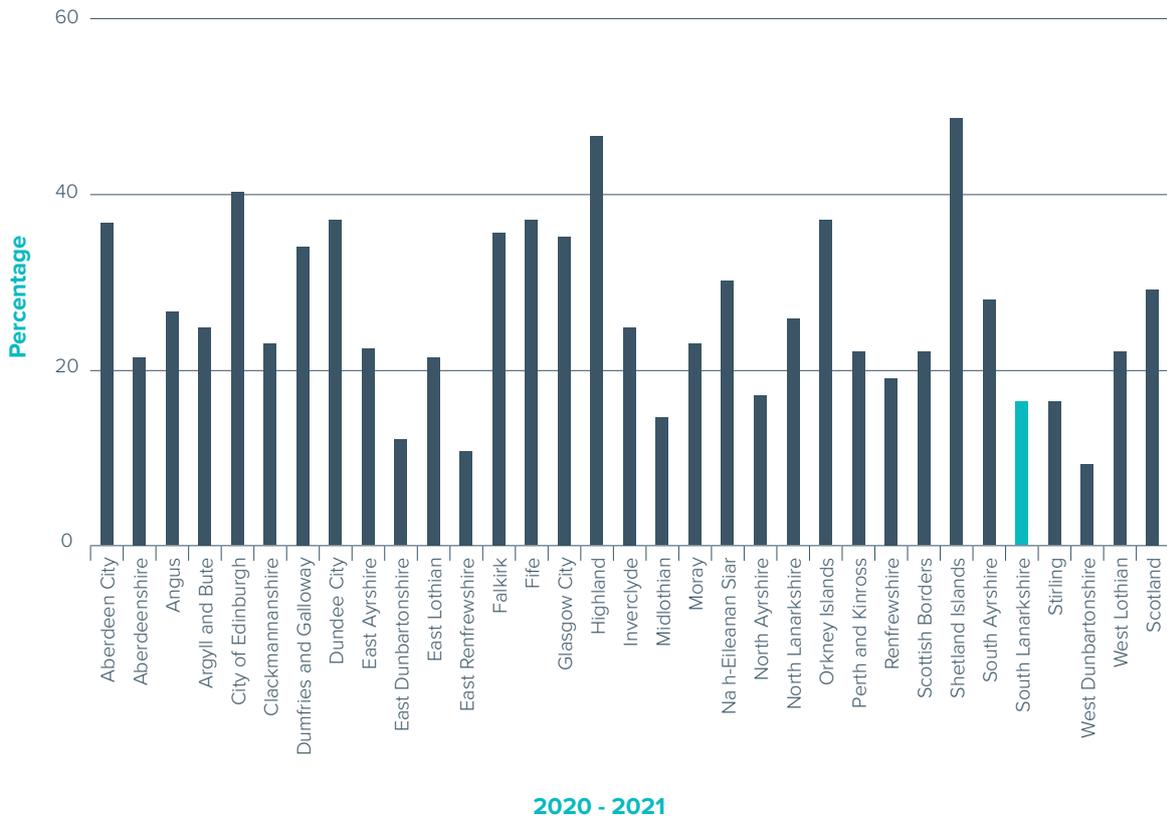

Similarly, it is important that the council give local businesses breathing space to recover from the pandemic by helping them absorb the steep increases in overheads. They can do this by, for example, committing to freeze fees and charges on areas such as waste, licensing and planning for at least the first two years of the next council term. Similarly, it could also rule out introducing schemes such as a workplace parking levy and a low emission zone, as well as freeze rents on their commercial properties.

Building community wealth

Local government spends around £7bn each year purchasing goods and services.¹ This significant spending power, if effectively harnessed, could make a real difference to local economies. Buying local can help councils support new jobs, create new businesses and, of course, reduce their carbon footprint.²

Since the last council elections, some local authorities have boosted the share of contracts that go to local businesses – resulting in an overall 6.2% increase in spend according to the latest figures. While the share of contracts that go to local businesses in South Lanarkshire Council over this period have increased by 1.5%, it should be noted that this is from a low base given that recent figures show that 17% of contracts go to local businesses.³

What percentage of my council’s procurement is spent on local enterprises?⁵

¹ www.fsb.org.uk/resources-page/fsb-procurement-reforms-yet-to-deliver-for-scottish-smaller-firms.html

² <https://cles.org.uk/publications/local-procurement-making-the-most-of-small-businesses>

³ www.improvementservice.org.uk/benchmarking

At a time when approaches such as community wealth building– the idea that councils should ensure wealth is locally-owned and shared by local people⁴ – are popular and when it has become more difficult and costly to import goods and services from abroad, this is an ideal opportunity to improve local spending dramatically and build more resilient local supply chains.

That is why the small business community is expecting the council to set ambitious targets to increase procurement spend with smaller local firms by two percentage points every year. This would result in the council approximately spending approximately £7 million more each year with local businesses – and be a tangible way to build genuine community wealth. Quick wins exist in areas like employability and early-years education, where many local small businesses are equipped to help deliver key council priorities.

Utilising key partnerships such as the South Lanarkshire Community Planning Partnership, the council's procurement and local economic development teams should also work with other key private and public institutions – such as the NHS and the education sector – to develop local supply chains.

And, finally, the council should regularly review their systems and processes to identify barriers to boosting local supply and look to increase their use of less burdensome procurement routes. We welcome recent changes made by the council to increase the threshold for Quick Quotes for construction and other works and are keen to monitor how it will impact its local spending.⁵

⁴ See: www.north-ayrshire.gov.uk/council/community-wealth-building/community-wealth-building.aspx

⁵ See: www.sdpscotland.co.uk/events/south-lanarkshire-council-new-quick-quote-process-1253

Supporting local businesses to go net zero

Scotland has set an ambitious and bold target to become net zero by 2045 – a legally binding target that will necessitate a radical transformation for all sectors of our economy.

The powers to achieve these targets are distributed across different institutions, regulators, and levels of government, creating a complex landscape. This can only be overcome with coordinated action.

Despite the impact Covid has had on the small business community, it is committed to playing its part in making a net zero economy a reality – with 74% believing they have a responsibility to help the country achieve our climate change commitments.⁶

However, months after COP26 took place in Glasgow, not enough local businesses understand the practical implications of the opportunities and risks presented by net zero, and the steps they will have to take to decarbonise their operations.

It will be important, therefore, that the council proactively engages with the local business community – especially regarding its own plans to tackle emissions and waste. This will require the council to develop net zero engagement plans, in partnership with local businesses, by the end of 2022.

Similarly, the council should build on its role as a key local regulator and signpost businesses to upcoming important changes that will affect their operations – by, for instance, notifying businesses of an upcoming important regulatory change in direct correspondence they will receive in any event, such as their non-domestic rates letters.

And, finally, the council should complement the national SME loan scheme – which offers finance of up to £100,000 to help pay for energy and carbon-saving upgrades⁷ – by providing ongoing grant support to small businesses who will find it particularly difficult and costly to decarbonise their operations.

⁶ www.fsb.org.uk/resources-page/state-of-small-business

⁷ <https://energy.zerowastescotland.org.uk/SMELoan>

Transforming local places

Over the last five years, local places within South Lanarkshire have taken a hit. These places have been fundamentally changed by Covid, with the rise of remote working and online shopping adding to the continued loss of bank branches and retail outlets.

The effects have been most acutely felt in the small businesses that populate every town in the area. Many independent retailers have struggled to compete with global online giants and out of town chain stores, while those in smaller premises have found Covid physical distancing rules disproportionately difficult to comply with. And, of course, local cafes, restaurants and pubs have had a particularly hard time.

However, our experiences over the last two years have led some people to rediscover the value of what is in their local neighbourhood and spend more money closer to home. As a result, some businesses are doing well, including the new independent businesses that have been created to service demand from higher levels of homeworking.

For local places to realise and capitalise on these economic opportunities, however, the help and support of the council will be required. In acknowledging the lack of funds available within the council to transform every one of their local places, small businesses believe it should, first and foremost, put town centres first. This will require bold action to reject applications for out-of-town retail developments for the next five years.⁸

Secondly, given that they were conceived in the pre-Covid world, it makes sense to ask whether the relevant projects to be delivered under the Glasgow City Region deal remain the correct ones. The beginning of the new council term would seem the ideal chance to review, not just whether all the old projects are still relevant, but how input from the local business community can be improved.

The council also needs to do more to tackle the empty properties on their books and in the wider local economy. A critical first step for the council is to establish the nature of the problem by creating a commercial property database, including details of ownership and vacant units. There is also mileage in transforming empty council owned properties into co-working spaces for local start-ups.

⁸ www.gov.scot/publications/new-future-scotlands-town-centres

Helping businesses to start-up and scale-up

Starting and running a business is seldom a straight-forward endeavour. Striking out on your own is a risky, costly and stressful experience – with irregular income levels and cashflow problems a common occurrence. And the last two years have exacerbated the problems business owners face at the start of their journey.

Moving forward, there is a real risk that people consider it too risky to either start, or continue, a business – a risk for even a stable economy like South Lanarkshire which gained an additional 80 registered businesses since the last council election.⁹

The council can continue to play an important role in de-risking entrepreneurship for local people by committing to fund and support comprehensive Business Gateway services up until at least 2027. South Lanarkshire is well placed to enhance Business Gateway services with the recently launched E3 programme run by Elevator. The positive economic impact of investing in this service can be seen in the new start-up businesses and established businesses that are helped to survive, innovate and grow each year, and who go on to create new self-employment opportunities and jobs in their local communities.

In addition, the council should investigate ways to target economic development and business support budgets to specific groups of business owners where there is high growth potential – notably women-led and migrant-led businesses. The Lanarkshire Women in Business programme has been a great success, and similar programmes can be undertaken to support other groups.

⁹ FSB analysis of the “Businesses in Scotland” publication: www.gov.scot/publications/businesses-in-scotland-2021

Smart regulation

South Lanarkshire Council performs a critical role in regulating the economy, with a significant chunk of business regulation designed and enforced by the council. This covers a diverse range of areas including environmental health, building standards, air quality and alcohol licensing.

For their part, small businesses understand the importance of well-designed and proportionate regulation. Indeed, since the Covid outbreak, these businesses have been central to public health efforts to fight the virus and keep places outside the home safe – often adapting their operations at short notice to comply with new public health restrictions (e.g. physical distancing).

Nonetheless, the regulatory experience of small businesses is not without its problems. One FSB member, who was seeking to pivot their café last year to begin the sale of alcohol drinks, was told that their application would take up to eight months to process by a licensing department. Another member had to call their council more than a dozen times to renew a licence.

Local authorities continue to interpret and implement regulations in differing ways – creating a regulatory landscape that can be inconsistent and confusing. This is a particular problem for businesses that operate in more than one council area.

As a result, small businesses need the council to simplify the regulatory interface by creating cross-departmental case managers for their queries – staff who would fast-track business enquiries and ensure prompt responses from different regulatory functions. There are also opportunities to modernise services such as licensing by developing simple and easy to use online systems which have been developed in partnership with the Digital Office¹⁰ and the Improvement Service.

¹⁰ www.digitaloffice.scot

There is also an opportunity for the planning authority to continue to adopt a pragmatic and flexible approach to temporary or seasonal developments and changes of use.¹¹ This will enable businesses to continue to make adaptations to their premises, such as expanding their outdoor facilities or improving ventilation, and in so doing play their part in preventing the spread of Covid-19.

Finally, when the council is embarking on new regulatory schemes – whether it's regulating air quality or the short-term lets sector – they need to keep a particularly close eye on how the practical impact of the scheme will have on local businesses.

¹¹ www.gov.scot/publications/coronavirus-covid-19-planning-and-covid-19-use-of-outdoors-spaces-and-the-the-28-day-rule

Scotland Office

E Scotland.policy@fsb.org.uk

T 0141 221 0775

www.fsb.scot

 facebook.com/federationofsmallbusinesses

 @FSB_Scotland

If you require this document in an alternative format
please email accessability@fsb.org.uk

